XIII.—SYRIA AND EGYPT.

A great disaster now suddenly clouded the fortunes of Napoleon. Lord Nelson, boasting with his fleet for a moment over Syria and Egypt, had been beaten by the French who had encamped at Alexandria. The fleet of Bruneys was at anchor in the bay of Aboukir. Nelson quickly sighted his antagonist, blockade him in the harbor of Alexandria, and began that famous battle of the Nile, the memory of which is still fresh in history and tradition. The French fleet was virtually destroyed. The Admiral's ship, the Le Général, sank in the harbor, the son of Captain Louis Casabianca stood at his post, giving to the ports of Havre a glorious victory to his country. The victory of the French was only four days after the five of the French vessels were destroyed. The rest, with nearly four thousand seamen, went into oblivion.

Napoleon had given up the sea. His ability to estimate the contingencies of naval warfare was small. Before his career was half expiated, he conceded the dominion of the ocean to his great enemy. Ever after the Egyptian campaign, his dependence upon men and material power which should counterbalance British supremacy on the deep. The result to him of the battle of the Nile was in every way disastrous. The effect of it was to stimulate to inspire distrust in France, encourage the Coalition, and to reanimate the Mamelukes.

Complaints broke out in the French army. Though victory had been decisive, the soldiers were weary of war. The soldiers were scorched on the blistering plains, and had little to eat but watermelons. Nevertheless, Napoleon went steadily on to the conquest of Egypt.

On the 22nd of October, at a preconcerted signal, Cairo broke into insurrection. For a while the French company was enabled to hold its own, and a terrible massacre was wreaked on its authors. Meanwhile, Napoleon conceived the project of making a campaign into Syria, attacking through the provinces of Jezireh and Sir Jean d'Arc. The situation was this: France and Turkey were nominally at peace. Napoleon had overthrown the last of the rebellious bey of Egypt. Theodore Bey, brother of Ibrahim the Sultan; and of him. But the thick brain of the Pasha of Latakia lengthed sufficiently to see that Mamel and Ibrahim Bey were not to be easily overcome. He sent his troops that now sat on his horses at Cairo, licking his mouth for more. The Sultan perceived that the French must be expiated. Napoleon had seen that the Sultan's conduct would be expected to come against him out of Syria. Therefore he would better proccupy Syria. Moreover, he had heard that the Turks had got the most of the Eastern Mediterranean. The Turkish army might not be expected during the winter; but the English were there already. Hence the Syrian campaign.

Napoleon divided his forces. He left about twelve thousand men to occupy Egypt, and with a like number set out, on the 11th of February, 1799, the retreat from Cairo, and Latakia. The march was accompanied with great hardships. At the walls of Mossoulah the French found water, and soon afterwards the same day, water and bread. Syria and Palestine were crossed, and the march was taken on the 17th of February. On the 1st of March, Napoleon slept at the convent of Ramla. He passed within a few miles of Jerusalem, and then made his way to Jaffa. A siege was immediately begun, and on the 6th of March the place was taken, with pillage and massacre. About four thousand of the prisoners were put to death, and the remainder, set in lines on the seashore and shot. This was done under the terrible necessity that the French to preserve themselves in the face of the plague.

Next came the horror of the plague. With the fall of Jaffa, the march was begun against St. Jean d'Arc. The Arabs and their camels came with the Turks. Lame, paralytic, the men and men into the passes of Nablus, was ambushed, and lost a considerable number of men. On the 18th of March the French arrived at Nablus, to find that the Pasha Djezzar had cut off the head of Napoleon's envoy, and thrown his body into the sea. The English under Sir Sidney Smith, and the Turks, held the town.

It was besieged until the 4th of May, when the French ammunition began to fail. The general amunition officer, General Dugommier, lay dead from his amputation of an arm. On the 10th of the month the French made an assault, and gained the trenches. During the six days that followed, the English were sent against the defenses, and on one occasion the town was partly occupied; but General Dugommier, who led the assault, was killed, and the English driven out through the breach.

Twelve sorties were made by the English, and the English were driven out through the breach.

That Tired Feeling—Severe Headaches, No Appetite

See Doctor Hood's Saraparilla Bring Back Life.

"Dear Sirs:—I received your Hood's Saraparilla. I was frequently sick and did not feel well. Once I would feel so tired I could hardly stand, the next time I would have a severe headache and so on, not to mention other complaints. I did not have any appetite and Was Completely Run Down.

I tried other cures, but they did not do good. Having heard a great deal about Hood's Saraparilla I decided to try a bottle. I am now in full health again.

as fast as you can get better. I have used six bottles and feel as well as ever. It has been of great benefit to me as I have regained my appetite.

Now Enjoy Good Health.

I can strongly recommend Hood's Saraparilla as an excellent blood medicine." M. SYMONS, Baltimore, Md.

CASWELL, O. T., May 5, 1850.—Mr. Editor: I will endeavor to put a few lines to your most valuable paper which I assure you is a welcome visitor in our home each week. We promised many of our friends before we left them that we should have the privilege of hearing from us through the columns of the News. Just two months ago we gave the information with regard to friends and relatives and located him at Harriet for Anthony, Kansas. One who has never had the experience knows what it takes to be laid father, mother and loved ones good-bye—not knowing but God in his wisdom and goodness may call many of them away where our mortal eyes can behold them no more.

BLACKBURN.

Will Ellis said he was not wanted until there was a platform for him to stand on.

Rhea and Ellis were on the reporter's table.

"Sit Rhe down!" demanded a loud-voiced man.

"There is no Sergeant-at-Arms and no man in this house can pull me down by the hair," answered Ellis.

Ellis demanded to know if it was in order for a Democratic convention to declare Democratic principles.

"Free speech! No gay-lay!" was the cry for fifteen minutes, while the Secretary was trying to take the vote by committee. The delegates adjourned, so that the Secretary's desk and chair from the present mode of living, and a reform in dress, the human race will continue to degenerate "till finally the tail will grow out again."

These are not the great minds in the world to-day that there once were.

There is no Webster now—no Homers or Shakespeares to come out of the literary world there are very few Tennysons or Longfellowes.

Ellis demanded to know if it was in order for a Democratic convention to decide Democratic principles.

"Free speech! No gay-lay!" was the cry for fifteen minutes, while the Secretary was trying to take the vote by committee.

The delegates adjourned, so that the Secretary's desk and chair from the present mode of living, and a reform in dress, the human race will continue to degenerate "till finally the tail will grow out again."

Judge Reeves stood by the chair commanding and advising him. The Secretary announced the vote to be 101 against adjourning to 96 for it.

Rhea was still on the table, and on the announcement of the vote, the Chair recognized Mr. Rhea. The free silver men had won. There was quiet and order.

Rhea sat down on one of his characteristic seats, roasting the opposition for being ashamed to see the man he had just nominated. He referred to Mr. Cleveland as the "alleged President," and the other members of the party in the resolutions he had presented.

All of controls was now ordered on voting for the resolutions as a whole or separately, and the silver men again won by pretty much the same vote, the resolutions being ordered taken up as a whole.

Mr. Wheeler then moved that the resolutions be adopted as a whole. The opposition weakened, and the resolutions were adopted unanimously by a vote.

A lady at Toolleys, La., was very sick with bilious colic when Dr. C. W. Miller, a prominent member of the town, sent her a bottle of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy. He says she was well in forty minutes after taking the first dose. For sale by A. R. Fisher, Cloverport, Ky., and Kincheloe & Board, Hardinsburg, Ky.

The human race is liable to deteriorate unless we are more temperate and more regular in our habits which as I said, is contrary to the interests of the world.

We must check our impetuosity, a change from the present mode of living, and a reform in dress, the human race will continue to degenerate "till finally the tail will grow out again."

CLAYTON.

The reports on rye are not so full as we have received from every reporter as the latter. The condition of rye is 95 per cent under that of wheat. Being raised principally for pasture, is usually grazed very hard through the winter, consequently it does not look as well as wheat at this time of year. The condition is placed at 95 per cent.
